Coastal species dominate biodiversity on marine debris at the surface of the mid-ocean North Pacific Subtropical Gyre (NPSG). Submesoscale ocean processes mediate debris movement in the NPSG. Close interactions of debris may facilitate persistence of this novel neopelagic community.